

---

What do women want?

#Q@A

J.D. Paige

---

Intro

Lets face it women make the world go round. They give birth to all human life and the promise of sexual relations with them is why all Mankind behave the way we do. Whether its hitting the gym, getting a haircut, dressing a certain way or even how we handle our finances. Its all clearly to impress the opposite sex. But honestly what is it that women really want? Do women really care how much money a man makes, what car he drives or if he is buff? No one knows. Sigmund Freud also asked the question, but he didn't have an answer either. Even today, the question of what motivates female sexual desire continues to elude us. I'm not some know it all that's claiming to be king with the ladies, I'm not even really a ladies man. I just know what I like. It seems what we men want is obvious. We get aroused by visuals, words spoken and just the slightest touch or hint of sex. But what makes a woman tick?

The female psyche

It seems that woman since they were little girls, depending on their exposure want a certain type of man. If their father was a hard working blue collar who made sure she had what she needed, she's looking for that type. At the same time though if her father was that way she might be bored of that, and want the infamous bad boy. There is considerable evidence that women seek a sense of intimacy and emotional attachment with their sexual partner. It's simply logic woman having no seed to spread, sex with more partners does not result in a higher chance of genetic offspring. Also keep in mind that women are at higher risk than guys for sexual violence and std's, and not to mention pregnancy. So it's truly beneficial for women to choose partners carefully. Also I read that the female orgasm, is less likely achieved than the male's so their odds of enjoying casual sex are lower. So it would only make sense that a woman wanting to increase her chances of sexual fulfillment is better off getting to know her partner well before she gets to sex. From this logic the claim insist that women are programmed to want relationships, not just sex; that they prefer stable, intimate relationships and are built for sexual monogamy and marriage.

---

Wrong

Wait not so fast though in my experience I've encountered both women who actually enjoy casual sex and those who seem to be looking for that special one. I had to dig a little deeper because I'm sure readers including myself wanted answers. More recent studies indicate that gender differences in reported number of sex partners are reduced or totally disappear if women are told that they are connected to a lie detector and the info will remain confidential. In other words, when women feel safe enough or just compelled to tell the truth about sex, the story starts to resemble the males. Even deeper though if women believe that they won't be hurt and the sex will be good they're more willingly to engage in casual sex. So basically if you build up that comfort level with your female counterpart and seduce them at the same time you're more likely to get laid. History of human sexuality is adapted for sperm competition. Evolution has taught us that woman are programmed to seek sex with different men in short succession, and have their sperm compete intra-vaginally for the right to be the father. So, the female having no seed of their own, they have a variety of men to choose from. Studies shown that the objects of female attraction are tend to vary during their cycle. The fertile days women want a high testosterone men who are not monogamous type but have stronger genes. I know this is a lot to take in and process, I'm still dealing with it myself. Does any of this actually answer what do women really want? Does the information get us closer as men to getting or becoming that guy woman desire. No but it does clear up a lot about why women are the way that they are. So basically if you're like me, you're probably more confused as ever. Don't sweat it we are simply here to co-exist with woman and love them for the fickle gender they're. My best advice for you guys out there trying to master this love game or really trying to be what a women wants, be yourself and just do you. Trust me they know what they want and if you're simply that, she sees you. Good luck and love hard all!